Self - Recognition

This animation tells the story of a small town ruled by fairy tales. Under the author's control, a duck transforms into a girl to help the story's protagonist, a prince who lost his heart while sealing away the Raven, recover his heart pieces.

- I found this animation successfully remaked many classic ffairy tales, inclued Swan Lake, The Ugly Duckling, Sleeping Beauty and other tales, but still stand out in its own way.
- The story begins in a small town ruled by fairy tales. Under the author's control, a duck transforms into a girl to help the protagonist in the tale, a prince who lost his heart while defeating the eivl and lived in the twon right now, and recover his heart pieces.
- The story sounds pertty traditional, but the prince in the story is who waited to be resuced, and the princess talked on the role of protector. Also, in the end they did not live happily ever after together, the roincess accepted her true self and decided to became to a duck again ultimately.
- I first saw this anima when I was a kids, to be honest the ending shocked me a lot, but now I can see the meaning behind this story. There is a line in the anima said: Those who obey shall find happiness, those who rebel shall find honor which I really like and fit the concept of Bettelheim's theroy.
- This is also what I want and try to make in this project, a story about self-discovery.

Character & Story Design Inspiration

Little Red Riding Hood

The Nutcracker and the Mouse King

- Anyways, I found fairy tales provided many inspirations both on character design and plot design.
- In character design, I used the element of Little Red Riding Hood, which makes the character's appearance easily to be recognized.
- In story, I want to reference on the Nutcracker and the Mouse King, which can be combined with fairy kind as mechanic.

THANK YOU!
